Program Facts

- Mediation improves communication and teaches participants to work together and problem solve by establishing root issues, identifying positions, and recognizing solutions.
- Unlike a traditional court case where information is kept on public record, mediation sessions are confidential. Mediators are trained to uphold confidence and protect all parties' personal information.
- Mediation is free for participants so they avoid paying court fees, attorney fees, and taking multiple days off of work to resolve their conflict.
- Most cases are resolved in one to two sessions with sessions lasting one to two hours.
- Mediation staff and volunteers at one of Michigan's Community Dispute Resolution Program mediation centers located throughout the state will manage the Michigan Behavior Health Mediation Services cases.
- Qualified parties include Michigan residents who receive mental health services from a Community Mental Health provider or a Prepaid Inpatient Health Plan.
- Oakland Mediation Center serves as the point of contact for participants seeking mediation.
- Michigan Department of Health and Human Services approved and awarded the program grant, which launched in September 2021, to Oakland Mediation Center.
